

And So They Were Married

By HAZEL DEVO BACHLOR
Copyright, 1919, by Public Ledger Co.

IT WAS almost a tragedy that finally waked Jane to womanhood and a consciousness of things. It did what even her marriage had not done, it shook her through and through. Jane, now that the first excitement of married life had died down, was beginning to resent little things that came up. At first she had liked and admired Bob's mother, now she thought her an old-fashioned interfering woman. At first she had liked Bob's married sister, now Jane laughed secretly at her clothes and voted her a "dub."

Jane always looked well of late because her pride would not allow her to do otherwise when she was where other people could see her. At home, however, she was careless and was apt to spend the morning reading a book with the house in wild disorder. Bob came home unexpectedly one morning and found her curled up in a chair. Knowing that Bob was away, she had not bothered to dress and she had a soiled kimono wrapped around her. Her black hair had not been brushed, and she had that ungraceful look that is worse in a woman than it is in a man.

As Bob's key turned in the latch she jumped out of her chair and stood waiting to see who it was, the kimono clutched about her with one hand, the book held in the other.

Then she rushed at him.

"Darling, I'm so glad to see you."

He dropped his traveling bag and took her in his arms. He kissed her upturned childish face, and although he had seen everything he said nothing about the disorder of the place.

"I'll go out and fix you something to eat," she said, tucking up her kimono and hurrying out.

"No, don't bother," he remonstrated following her.

She turned on him wide surprised eyes. "But you said you hadn't eaten."

"I'll pick up something to eat downtown," he said evasively. "I've got to report anyway."

Jane said good-bye to him and went back to her book. She read for a few minutes and then threw it aside and rushed for writing materials. Some chance phrase in the book had given her an idea for a story, the writing came on her and in a few minutes she was oblivious to everything. A child's scream startled her and she sprang to her feet looking about her wildly.

Joy, where was Joy?

She rushed across to the room and out to the kitchen and screamed aloud. Joy lay on the floor, her little muslin skirt in flames. It had been the old, old story of the box of matches and the neglected baby.

Jane was so coward and she was desperate. She knelt down on the floor and rolled Joy in a rug. She was like a mad woman beating out the flames with her bare hands. Then when the fire was out, before looking at Joy she sprang to the telephone and called up the nearest doctor.

Joy lay unconscious on the rug, and Jane lifted her up tenderly and carried her into the disordered bedroom. To her dying day Jane never forgot that afternoon. The strange doctor and having to admit him in the dirty old kimono thrown on over her night dress, the littered house, the fact that there were no clean pots in which to heat water, and most horrible of all that awful fear that hung over her while they worked over Joy.

Jane blamed herself and herself alone. She was at last awake. Bob felt stricken to the heart when he saw her face. Not for the world would he have blamed her, for she wore the expression of a woman in torture. That little girl look that he had loved so seemed wiped off forever.

She waited with a world-old patience for the doctor's verdict. She watched dry-eyed everything that was done. There were no tears, no recriminations, no protests at the suspense. When they told her that Joy would live she did not crumple up as they had expected her to do the minute the vigil was over; she stood perfectly silent for a moment. Not one of them there knew that she was registering a silent vow, but every one wondered what had suddenly changed her so strangely.

From that moment Jane gained dignity. She had caught a glimpse of herself that she had never seen before and that she would never forget. The picture of a dirty, inefficient mother that she knew was herself shamed and humbled her. And that Joy had been spared to her seemed nothing short of a miracle. There would be hard days ahead of Jane, days when she would struggle against her old self and her old slipshod ways in a tempest of resentment. But the memory of Joy's little bandaged cheek against the white pillow, the smell of drugs in the room and the agony in her heart that she felt that day as she blamed herself over and over again for what had happened would never fail to bring tears to her eyes and thankfulness to her heart. Jane had waked up at last.

Tomorrow—Gene and Betty solve the Problem.

WANAMAKER'S

Wanamaker's Down Stairs Store Will Hold a Fashion Show Tomorrow

Autumn will spread forth her loveliness and new fashions will bloom at their best. Here will be shown

Dresses Hats Coats
Suits Blouses Skirts

—modes suitable for all the different occasions of the Fall and Winter seasons. Styles are correct and new and interesting, and they demonstrate conclusively that one need not expend great sums of money to be well and fashionably dressed. Almost everything that is shown is less than $100, and the greater number are between $25 and $45.

Of particular interest are the copies of Paris models that will be shown.

Posings will be held in the Market Street section tomorrow and Wednesday, at 11 to 12:30 in the morning and 2 to 3:30 in the afternoon.

The Warm Glow of Pink is more pleasant than ever this time of year, and so most of women's pretty underthings are pink!

Nightgowns

of a soft, crepe-like batiste are simply made and finished with a narrow lace edging. $1.25.

Another, of pink batiste, is made in empire style and is prettily stitched in blue. $1.50.

Bloomers

Pink crepe bloomers, with elastic at the waists and knees, are trimmed with hemstitched ruffles. $1.

Re-enforced bloomers of a soft, crepe-like batiste, with hemstitched ruffles are $1.50.

Good Umbrellas for Men and Women Special at $3.50

Durable, good-looking umbrellas for the rainiest of rainy days have covers of union taffeta (silk and cotton) with wooden handles. Those for women have plain or carved mission handles with silk wrist cords.

The men's are in opera style or crooked.

Gleaming Metallic Laces and Silken Nets are awakening a great deal of feminine interest. They are all fresh and new and lovely.

Wide flouncings, in black or white embroidered with gold or silver threads, or in rose, sky blue, turquoise, orchid and sapphire, are 34 inches wide and $3.50 to $4.50 a yard.

An especially attractive flouncing in black, embroidered with gold or silver, is heavily fringed at the bottom at $5.75 to $7.50 a yard.

Lace bandings, many in patterns to match the flouncings, are in gold, old gold, silver and nickel at 45c to $3.75 a yard; 1 1/2 to 11 inches wide

Special

A lot of charming black silk net flouncings embroidered in black silk are 25 inches wide at $3.25 and $3.75, and 34 inches wide at $3.75 and $4.75 a yard.

Morning Frocks at $3.85

Really, they are too nice to wear in the house. The gingham—checked with pink, blue, lavender or black—is durable quality that will launder well.

Underwear in Weights That Men Are Buying Now

Medium-weight natural merino shirts and drawers—the shirts with long sleeves, the drawers ankle length—are $1.25 the garment. "Seconds."

Heavy-weight fleeced cotton long sleeve shirts and ankle length drawers are $1.25. First quality.

Hosiery

Black lisle seamless half hose in sizes 10 to 11 1/2 are 25c a pair. Black cotton half hose, seamless, with white feet, are 30c a pair.

Men's Flannellet Nightshirts Special at $2.15 and Pajamas Special at $2.50

Both are made of a warm quality of flannellet, striped in blue, gray or pink. They are well made.

Considering the value, a man will be wise to get half a dozen of whichever he prefers.

Warm Bathrobes for Women

Soft pink, pretty blue, dark red, gray mixtures, etc.—figured in various patterns form the blanket bathrobes in a large assortment. They are long and full and are trimmed with satin and finished with cords about the waists. $5.

Fashion Steps Forth in the Shoe Store, Too

There has been a great marching in of fashionable new footwear during the past fortnight and some very interesting things have been revealed. There are close to thirty thousand pair of new shoes for women in readiness for the Fall and Winter seasons, presenting correct footwear for every occasion, from the heavy storm boot that isn't afraid of any kind of weather to dainty patent leather pumps with high heels.

Prices are worth a word by themselves, for they are, in every instance, comparatively low. In all this collection there is not a shoe over $10 and most of them are well under $8. Their worth is unquestioned, for their smartness of line and excellence of workmanship represent sound value for every dollar expended.

Pumps Show Their Heels

—in fact, they make a point of them! Newest is the baby French heel, a low curved heel, graceful, yet presenting a substantial walking surface. This is shown in black kid at $7.50.

The medium height military heel is used on a most interesting pump of tan kid with fine perforations marking the tip and the sides. $7.50.

Quite high and curved is the heel on a dress pump of flashing patent leather with a long, pointed toe, absolutely plain. $7.50.

Other charming new pumps as low as $5.40. Spats to wear with these pumps are in white, chamois yellow, hunter's green and many fawn and gray shades at $2 and $2.50.

No Monotony Among the High Shoes

A dull black calf, for instance, has a high, laced top of gray suede. The heel is low and comfortable for walking, making this an excellent shoe to wear with street suits and dresses. $7.90.

Dark brown kidskin, soft and pliable, makes another shoe which relies on its good lines for charm. The heel is curved and high, yet is built up of leather, a kind many women find most comfortable. $6.90, special.

Newest of all is a trim, glove-fitting shoe of black suede that will make any foot look small. The sole is turned and the heel is high and curved. $9.75.

Other well-cut, smooth-fitting shoes for women are marked as low as $6.90.

Adventures With a Purse

YOU will like the lovely little handkerchiefs, in various pale shades—lavender, pale pink, tan—a color to match your costume, and different because they are of one solid color. They cost twenty-five cents each. A box of six would make a very nice gift.

The new veils are very smart. Have you seen them? They are of fine mesh and come in blue or black. Around the bottom is a taffeta band, edged with a narrow frilling of taffeta. This fits around the neck, fastening in the back and resembling a ruff. I saw one woman with a tailored suit of gray and black material—tweed, perhaps—a little black velvet hat and one of these veils with the black banding. She looked very trim and smart. The veils cost $3.

The new gift baskets are delightful. You will be charmed with them. One of gilt and with no handle has three little glasses of jam and one of chocolate for making a rich, steaming cup of hot chocolate. Old pieces of candy are tucked here and there among the jars. It sort of reminds one of the basket so faithfully carried by Little Red Riding Hood to her grandmother. The prices range from $2.75 to $5.75. And, oh, yes! each has a perky bow of ribbon on the top. These baskets are a change from the customary gifts of flowers or candy which are generally tendered to the invalid or sick friend. And you know they can afterward be used as sewing baskets.
